No thanks 1 By bb0rf The App crashed on 3 out of 4 computers so the app is either buggy or very unreliable.Broadcast When we launched On Air in early 2008, we used it as the cornerstone of BBC America's continued efforts to strengthen our digital offerings. That means that, as part of the recent launch of the new On Air app, I'm delighted to be making our first on-air broadcast at the TED Conference on Monday. TED is a unique institution that brings together individuals and organisations from all across the world with a common interest in ideas. Each year, more than 3,000 people attend these highly-curated sessions, as some of the most forward-thinking thinkers in the world share their ideas and discoveries. We're delighted to be part of this year's TED conference, and I look forward to seeing how technology is shaping the way we communicate ideas, experience the world and share our ideas with each other. For us, broadcast is a key element of our strategy to develop long-term partnerships with people and organisations like TED. It also represents a step forward in terms of the pace of our growth. I've been in the TV industry for more than 15 years, and there are certain things that I know about broadcast that I hope help people to understand why I think it's an important area for the BBC. Unlike a lot of people, I have an undiluted love for the TV industry, and what it can do for people. While I'm grateful for the BBC
