A silicon carbide (SiC) single crystal is expected to be applied to a semiconductor device having a high withstand voltage and a high speed operation. In order to manufacture a SiC device, a single crystal ingot of a wafer for semiconductor manufacture, in which a SiC single crystal ingot is formed as a substrate, is used. When a silicon carbide (SiC) single crystal ingot is manufactured, there is used a method of, for example, forming a single crystal substrate by a sublimation recrystallization method or the like and then removing a grown silicon carbide single crystal to obtain a silicon carbide single crystal ingot. In such a single crystal substrate (wafer) manufacturing method, when the removed silicon carbide single crystal ingot is released or another single crystal ingot is prepared, the state of the single crystal ingot is stabilized by the releasing condition, the direction of the single crystal ingot, or the like, and then it is cut into a proper size. In this case, the wafer for semiconductor manufacture is cut into a rectangular shape as a standard. It is necessary to cut the silicon carbide single crystal ingot into a circular shape as the standard of a wafer for a semiconductor. A method of obtaining a circular shape by cutting of a silicon carbide single crystal ingot (refer to Patent Literature 1) has been proposed. Jeb Hagerty Eugene Jasper Hagerty (born February 10, 1943) is a former professional American football defensive back in the American Football League for the Denver Broncos.
